All of the Contributors were absolutely wonderful! The one I liked best was Dr. Thelma Reyna. It is so unfortunate that her contributions were interrupted by the vagaries of ZOOM technology. Her story and her poetry pierced the armor of my spirit. I have lost 2 beloved family members to COVID-19 in the past several months. Her insights and her written words gave me a gift of hope and healing that I can really use as I work through the profound anger and grief that I am living with. I am thrilled with the connection between the Schools of Humanity and Medicine. It is a connection that serves both entities, their faculty, and students, so well. I will share that I worked as a Clinical Research Nurse for the SOM/Div. Infectious Diseases, for 20 years. Virtually all my work was with HIV/AIDS. During the first several years, we did not yet have effective anti-HIV treatment. All of the people we saw in our Clinic and who participated in our research projects were living with a death sentence. Together, we did great work, to discover ways to treat and prevent the opportunistic infections that were killing them. Our work was hard and often heartbreaking. We were an astoundingly collaborative and caring group. We supported each other unfailingly. In retrospect, I think if this collaboration between our Schools had been connected back then, we could have provided each other with food for the journey. Early on, I got to know Dr. Meyskens because a lot of our patients had cancer. He was unfailingly ethical, compassionate and supportive to everyone who came to UCI, in any capacity...colleagues, medical and admin support staff, patients, families. As one who had responsibilities for overseeing the ethics and proper conduct of Clinical Trials, he was unfailingly competent and protective of participants and investigators alike. He was always fair. His door was always open. He always listened more than he talked. He quickly became a hero and a role model for me and remains so until this day. I was so happy to see him and just thrilled to listen to his writing and his insights. I am sad that he has faced and endured so many illnesses in the past several years, but I was truly moved to tears by his tribute to nurses who cared for him. Finally, I want to say that while I appreciate her enthusiasm, I was really put off by the amount of time that Jayne Lewis took to express her own responses and thoughts to the presentations and to the questions from the audience. She took too much time away from the contributors. Finally, I want to express my sincere and really profound gratitude to absolutely everyone who worked on this project in any capacity. It was a gift of help, health, healing and hope. Thank you all, so much! bobi keenan

It was VERY difficult to access this program. Usually, with a confirmation email, there is an easy link to join the event. I had to try multiple times and could not join until 6.20pm. The "Access" or "view" buttons kept taking me to Facebook and not to the event itself. Thank you for looking into this.

There was a richness and warmth in seeing the speakers/poets in their home environments rather than in a sterile classroom setting. One also had an overall better view of their performances on screen rather than watching someone behind a lectern with perhaps rows of people sitting in front of you. Even with the internet glitches, everything came through beautifully with poignant, moving, heartfelt performances. I loved it! ~ Susan Anderson

It was a lovely evening. Please keep a virtual option available, if possible, even after there is an ability to meet again in person. Thank you!

To ensure the speakers have good Internet connection

There was no Zoom link and link to view event did not launch the event.

I REALLY HOPE YOU GUYS DO MORE THINGS LIKE THIS THIS WAS AMAZING THANK YOU SO MUCH

Marvelous, inspiring evening!

Despite technical glitches it was a series of heartfelt poems and presentations . It helps bring less science and more humanity into the medical community that is badly needed. Continue This important work as the American medical system needs to rebuilt to be inclusive for all and more compassionate for all people. Our system of health care in the US has been failing in so many ways and this crisis has only made that fact more evident,

The event needs to feature fewer poems so that more time can be spent with each of the poems. Keep the diversity of this year's event, not just in terms of ethnicity, but in terms of poetry skill level. Continue to bring in a well-established poet to the event (like Thelma Reyna), as it adds to the overall learning experience and gives novice poets something to aspire to.

It was just a bit long

Every one of the poets was so alive, so giving. I was in tears over and over again at their generosity.

Loved this event. Thank you.

Inspired! Uplifted!

Thank you again for organizing the space for storytelling and healing at yesterday's Poetry Symposium. It was admirable and touching to hear such diverse, intense reflections on our complex identities, and what it means to live and find meaning in moments of loss and struggle. I was particularly intrigued by the comment that considered poets as "first responders." It shows how important it is to honor and share these honest stories that speak to our times. Indeed, poetry can be one of those languages.

Thank you for a marvelous evening of poetry and healing. I was inspired, moved and uplifted.
